

And Death Shall Have His Dominion

by Theodore Dalrymple (March 2015)

There are many ways of dividing humanity into two other than those who divide humanity into two and those who don't. For example, there are those who are attracted to cemeteries and those who are repelled by them. I am of the former moiety: cemeteries are for me like bookshops; I find it difficult to resist the temptation to enter them and linger awhile.

more>>>