

Moving On

by Dilip Mohapatra (September 2015)

You perhaps have grown tired of me and do not respond to my anxious calls nor to my frantic messages.
You look the other way when we cross each other's tracks by default hoping that I shall crumble into a heap of ignoble dust to be blown away to nothingness or I would dissolve my heart bit by bit in the salinity of my caustic tears.

But I assure you I too would forget you and ignore you fraction by fraction and soon your name would be wiped off my conscience like the writings on the sands on the beach licked clean by one sweep of an indignant wave and then I would spread my wings once again to fly off to another far off land and roost on another tree.

Dilip Mohapatra (b.1950), a decorated Navy Veteran started writing poems since the seventies. His poems have appeared in many literary journals of repute worldwide. Some of his poems are included in the World Poetry Yearbook, 2013 and 2014 Editions. He has three poetry collections to his credit, the latest titled Another Look recently published by Authorspress India. His fourth book P2P nee Points to Ponder is a departure from his poetic passion and is a collection of his musings on various themes which are meant to act as points in a mariner's compass helping the reader to navigate his life better in rough waters. He holds two masters degrees, in Physics and in Management Studies. He lives with his wife in Pune. His website may be accessed at dilipmohapatra.com.

To comment on this poem, please click