

Towards Light and More

by Changming Yuan (October 2017)

The Dream, Balthus, 1955

Towards Light

in a world always half in darkness your body may be soaked deep in a nightmare, rotting

but your heart can roam like a synchronous satellite in the outer space, leaving the long night far behind as long as your heart flies fast and high enough, you will live in light forever

Skyline in the North

At the same height of Every rocky mountain
 Above all seasonal change
You are widely and cursively cut

As if to bite a whole patch of Sky from heaven
 With rows of rows of Whale-like teeth

Yuan Changming, nine-time Pushcart and two-time Best of the Net nominee, started to learn English at nineteen and published monographs on translation before moving out of China. With a Canadian PhD in English, Yuan currently edits Poetry Pacific with Allen Yuan in Vancouver; credits include seven chapbooks (including Dark Phantasms [2017]), Best of the Best Canadian Poetry: 10th Anniv. Ed., BestNewPoemsOnline, Threepenny Review and 1339 others across 40 countries.

To help New English Review continue to publish scholarly and interesting articles, please