

Wilfred Owen's Parable Updated

by Robert Gear (December 2024)

Somali Ostrich (Friedrich Wilhelm Kuhnert)

The ostrich took his large eye, claws and his son
And carried them up a mountain
To show the world and spread the news
Told him by his own clan.
(Followed closely by some chickens, beaks bobbing)

The ostrich held his son down
Then tied him up.

The youngster asked his father
“What would you with me, father, why do you frown?
Why would you kill your own son? Catch rather
The rooster caught in a thicket. He is there to kill,
Strike him and we may recover all.
And you are strong still.
I have read that an angel must stay your arm.

Can't you understand?”

But the ostrich would not, and slew his son.
And all the lands of Europe, fell, one by one.

Table of Contents

Robert Gear is a Contributing Editor to New English Review who now lives in the American Southwest. He is a retired English teacher and has co-authored with his wife several texts in the field of ESL. He is the author of If In a Wasted Land, a politically incorrect dystopian satire.

Follow NER on Twitter @NERIconoclast