

Aussie-Passport-Holding Muslim – Convicted Over Melbourne Jihad Mass-Murder Plot – Gets Killed Fighting for Islamic State

As reported yesterday by Aussie ABC's Dan Oakes and Suzanne Dredge.

Another one bites the dust.

'Australian Jihadi convicted over Melbourne terror plot reportedly killed fighting for Islamic State'.

Wow. ABC actually used the word 'jihadi'. But they will still swear black and blue that it all had NothingtodowithIslam... – CM

'An Australian man (sic: "An Australian-passport-holding Muslim man" – CM) once convicted over a Melbourne terror plot (a Muslim plot to ritually murder lots of Aussie infidels in Melbourne – CM) has reportedly been killed fighting for Islamic State in Syria.

Good riddance to bad rubbish. Assuming that the report is correct, ASIO and the AFP can scratch his name off the long, long list of People To Worry About. – CM

'An edition of an Islamic State magazine called "Rumiyah" carries a long article about Melbourne man (formerly-Melbourne-resident Muslim man – CM) Ezzit Raad, including a photograph which appears to be of his corpse.

'It says Raad was killed by a piece of shrapnel to the chest in the Syrian city of Manbij, which was captured in August by Kurdish forces fighting against Islamic State.

'Raad was convicted, along with other family members and influential jihadist preacher Abdul Nacer Benbrika, in 2008, over the Operation Pendennis terror plot, which was supposed to target the MCG (that is: the Melbourne Cricket Ground – CM), Crown Casino, and other landmarks in Melbourne.

He was given a laughably light sentence – five years! – and when the five years was up, instead of being stripped of citizenship and deported to that portion of the Desolation of Mohammed from which his parents had come, was duly released and turned loose again amongst the very same Aussie infidels whom he and his cohorts had plotted to human-sacrifice to 'allah'. Fortunately for us, however, he decided to gallop off to join the jihad in Syria, and now – one sincerely hopes – he is dead, dead, dead, and therefore cannot return to be a menace to every hapless Aussie non-Muslim he encounters. – CM

'The article says that Raad – who also went by the name Abu Mansur – became even more radicalised (that is: even more fervently, purely and murderously Mohammedan – CM) during the five years he spent in prison for the Pendennis plot, becoming "more emboldened and more steadfast upon this path" of sacrifice.

Yeah. All the more determined to 'slay and be slain in the path of 'allah'", just like it says in the Quran. – CM

'It says that Raad also became contemptuous of "moderate" Muslim leaders such as Melbourne-based Sheikh Mohammed Omran, whose own son was killed in mysterious circumstances in Syria earlier this year.

One hopes that ASIO and the AFP are looking very, very closely into said Sheikh and his associates. Because I don't believe for one second that he didn't know what his son was up to. –

CM

'The article says that when Raad was released he quickly left behind his wife and four children (for the Aussie tax-payer to support via Centrelink benefits, I'll bet – CM) and departed for the Middle East (*gee, just like that; personally, though, I'd rather that such as he were permitted and even encouraged to depart, so long as they were not permitted to return – CM), becoming one of the first foreign jihadis to enter Syria.

'Raad allegedly became close to the leadership of Islamic State in Syria and fought in many battles.

I wonder how many defenceless Christians and Yazidis he robbed and murdered? I wonder how many terrified little Yazidi and Christian girls he brutally abused? – CM

'He then reportedly moved to the Syrian city of Aleppo, where he witnessed firsthand the split between the Islamic State and another jihadi group, Jabhat Al Nusra.

The Ummah eats itself. – CM

'Ultimately Raad ended up as the commander of an area around a Syrian dam, where he was reportedly assisted by an Australian (sic: "Aussie-passport-holding Muslim" – CM) named "Abu Zakariyya (Abu Bakr Jabir), otherwise known as the 'tall man' due to his lofty height and noble character".

I doubt that there was anything much about this creature that the average decent and sane Infidel would regard as noble. – CM

'Abu Zakariyya was later killed by an airstrike (good riddance! – CM), the article says, and his death was followed closely by that of "Abul-Mundhir (Nidal Ramadan, the brother of Abu Mansur's wife)", who was killed in a drone strike (again, good riddance! one less death cultist on the surface of the planet – CM), and whose wife and child were killed in an earlier drone strike that had targeted him.

And who would therefore be counted as 'martyrs' worthy of 'paradise'. If Nidal Ramadan took his family into the midst of a warzone – and quite probably was using them as 'human shields' – he knew this could happen to them. Mohammedans and Islamophiles will, of course, wail and cry when Mohammedan human shields and would-be 'martyrs' get killed because they are keeping company with jihadi mass-murderers. One must also bear grimly in mind that the wife and any children older than about age 3 would have been full to the brim with murderous hatred toward each and every Infidel on the planet, such that news of the Muslim killing of Infidel women and children (such as occurred, for example, at Nice, where the Muslim with his truck deliberately aimed for and ran over little ones in strollers) would most likely have been greeted by them – that wife, those sweet little Mohammedan children, pickled in hatred of the Infidel from the moment they could walk and talk – with ecstatic glee.– CM

'Soon after relocating to Manbij with his fighters to meet the assault by Kurdish forces, Raad was reportedly killed.

'The magazine article also names a number of Australians (sic: 'Aussie-passport-holding Mohammedans' – CM) who travelled to Iraq and Syria, and fought alongside Raad, including Melbourne ("formerly-Melbourne-resident" – CM) teenager Adam Dahman, who carried out a suicide bombing in Iraq in 2014.

For more on Dahman, who was raised by a devoutly-Muslim family, and observed the Ramadan fast, appeared superficially westernised in his mid-teens, but then became increasingly Islamically pious and, oh, surprise, surprise, Went Jihad, see here:

<http://www.heraldsun.com.au/news/law-order/suspected-melbourne-suicide-bomber-adam-dahman-in-turn-to-zealotry/news-story/12a0d8e408516f6975e670a91711858d>

'In 2012, as he entered his second last year at Northcote High School (that is, in Yr 11 – CM) all that [his apparently-secular behaviour – CM) changed. Dahman shed all his non-Muslim friends, stopped going to classes, and developed a new religious zeal....". And off he went to Syria to Do Jihad. But now, back to our latest deceased jihadi terrorist.– CM

'It (the Islamic State obit – CM) also references another Australian ('Aussie-passport-holiday Muslim' – CM), Sami Salma, who is believed to be one of the first Australian (formerly-Australia-resident – CM) jihadis killed fighting for IS. It is believed to be the first time Salma has been named as a fighter in an IS publication.

'The article finishes with an exhortation to Islamic State sympathisers in Australia to carry out attacks here.'

Our authorities should take this seriously, and increase vigilance. But even if Islamic State – the organisation – did not exist, the Jihad doctrine of Islam would still be right there in all the canonical texts, front and centre.

When Abdul Nacer Benbrika hatched his mass-murderous plot – fortunately detected and destroyed a-borning, in 2008 – there was no Islamic State organisation in existence. But there was Al Qaeda and any number of others, because the Ummah – the so-called "Muslim community" – is the sheltering, nurturing sea in which the jihadis swim and from which, ceaselessly, they emerge.

We Aussies foolishly admitted large numbers of Muslims into Australia, from the 1970s onward, and are still – even more foolishly, after their deadly dangerousness has now been sufficiently revealed to anyone with even a smidgen of commonsense – admitting thousands upon thousands more.

Got Muslims? Got Jihad. We have Muslims in our midst; therefore, we have the constant threat of Jihad, a neverending stream of young men (and also women) raised in Muslim families who heed the siren song of Jihad and either go off overseas to some current hotspot – such as Syria – or, worse, start hatching plots to kill the hated Infidel right here on Aussie soil.

The way to have less Jihad inside the gates is to have few or no Muslims present inside the gates.

Our first response to these threats should be an immediate halt to all entry of identifiable Muslims; any person from an OIC country, unless they can be demonstrated to be from one of the oppressed and abused indigenous non-Muslim minority groups (e.g., a Syrian Christian), should not be allowed in.

And persons such as the French-passport-holding Muslim, Smail Ayad, who recently – whilst in Australia on a tourist visa of some sort – murdered two hapless infidels, fellow tourists (one of whom he had fooled into thinking him a friend) at a hostel in an Australian country town, should not be admitted, either; it's time to be shameless about 'profiling', and it isn't that difficult to deduce that a person named something like 'Smail Ayad' is highly likely to be Muslim and therefore liable to Go Jihad, no matter how nicely-smiling he might appear to be, for the moment. Keep them out; and start finding ways to discourage those already present, from remaining. Beginning with appropriate changes to the law to permit the likes of the late unlamented Ezzit Raad to be stripped of their citizenship status, so as to prevent them from ever returning (should they survive their Excellent Jihad Adventure), the moment that it is known that they have beetled off back to the dar al Islam to engage in combat in some jihad hotspot. Let them go; don't let them back in. That would rid us of a lot of the most immediately dangerous.

Meanwhile, I hope that ASIO and the AFP will be taking a good, hard long look at Mr Raad's immediate family, and extended family, and any and all mosques that he or any other family member – was wont to attend, in Melbourne or anywher else in Australia. – CM
