

Brexit Betrayal III – Protest in Westminster today. Updated 10pm GMT

I was sure we would get Brexit today, this time, as promised. I started to believe when I saw the signs on the motorway three weeks ago. I caught it the nanosecond the sentence moved, but you can take my word that it was a notice to lorry drivers that after Brexit on the 31st October their paperwork from Europe would change and need checking.

There were adverts on the television "On 31st October Britain is leaving the EU"; "Be ready for Brexit". Only this afternoon I picked up the leaflet left in the post office.

But by last weekend we knew we had been betrayed again. And being the polite law abiding people we are there have been no riots, no civil unrest. But instead of the party in Westminster it was a march and rally. I couldn't go due to family commitments but friends are there and these are some of their photographs. So far the press isn't covering this – update, a
