

Canada must address our bad education system and overreaching courts

The realm of higher learning is a tenebrous thicket of extravagance, faddishness and oppressive political correctness

by Conrad Black

Jordan Peterson, who has faced recurrent threats and demands that he conform to confected adaptations of language and restrictions, is now notorious. I have written here before that he must not be required to face this assault alone and the entire thoughtful community must support his right to free speech. Recently, Wilfrid Laurier University has been the scene of many spectacles of administrative and faculty cowardice before the juggernaut of political correctness, including removing a statue of National Post.
