

Clear-Sighted Aymeric Chauprade, Who Doesn't Mince Words

Here is the article in which Chauprade's linking of Muslims (the True Believers) and the Nazis is discussed.

You can also google his name to watch some of his appearances. Marine Le Pen let him go yesterday, when she should have supported him to the hilt.

It was not only Hitler who admired Islam, and Himmler, but all kinds of Nazis. And the SS Handschar Brigade consisted of Muslims (why does the author of the article call them "Muslim Croats" when they did not identify as such?), and it was not the "rejection of Zionism" that made for an elective affinity between Haj Amin el Husseini, mufti of Jerusalem (often misidentified as "Grand Mufti" when there is no such thing) and the leader of the Arabs in Mandatory Palestine (they weren't yet called "Palestinians" – that wouldn't happen until after the Arab defeat in the Six-Day War, when a new strategy of using propaganda rather than relying on military means gave birth to the non-existent "Palestinian people") and the Nazis, because they all shared a murderous antisemitism.

And so many Nazis who escaped to Egypt, or Syria, and found work in the security services of Nasser or whoever was running Syria, found Islam congenial, fully consonant with their previous beliefs, and converted to Islam. Johann von Leers is one famous case, Alois Gruber another, but there are so many == just google around using such phrases as "Nazi converts to Islam."

It's good that Aymeric Chauprade, even if shone the door by a disloyal and timid Marine Le Pen, is not about to shut up. Just raising these matters, even if he is then attacked and attacked, means he is given a chance to push them into the public consciousness, and others will now investigate, find that he is right, and start writing about the Nazis and Islam, Hitler and Himler and German war criminals and Haj Amin el Hussein, and the pro-Nazi revolt in Baghdad in 1941 of Rashid Ali (where Jabotinsky's likely intended successor, David Raziel, who had volunteered with other Jews from Mandatory Palestine to help the British, lost his life in a daring raid) and much, much, more.
