

CONFIRMED: Daily Mail Article BLOCKED In Sweden Due To Migrant Murder Court Case

According to reported that the family of the deceased 22-year-old Alexandra Mezher had revealed that she told them before her death that some of the ages of the so-called “child” migrants in the asylum centre were suspicious to her. She said she was dealing with “big powerful guys” aged up to 24 years old.

That article reported Miss Mezher’s mother Chimene relating what her daughter told her about her work at the children’s centre.

Miss Mezher’s mother Chimene said ‘orphans’ at the centre often lied about their age. Mrs Mezher, 42, said: ‘Alexandra knew how to handle children including violent ones. But those she was working with were big powerful guys – she could see it in their eyes and their bodies. A few were maybe under 18, but the rest were older, maybe 23 or 24.’

She said her psychology graduate daughter had been warned four hours before she started her last shift that a knife had been stolen from the kitchen, but nothing was apparently done.

Mrs Mezher said: ‘She said she had two from Somalia there, but never mentioned any trouble with them. Alexandra never said she was afraid of working there – I think she was protecting me, she did not want to scare me. But a friend from the centre called her four or five hours before she started work that day to say a knife had been stolen from the kitchen. I heard her talking. No one was allowed to say anything to their bosses at that place, they were too frightened, so I don’t know if the missing knife was reported. The boss of the company has not even been here to see the family.’

Mother-of-four Mrs Mezher, who migrated from Lebanon 25 years ago, said: 'Immigration has destroyed Sweden, they are coming in more than the country can accept. The kids that are coming here are criminal.'

Staff at the centre where the aid worker was stabbed in the back and thigh on Monday morning were allegedly ignored when they repeatedly warned a 'serious' incident would happen, it was claimed.

A therapist at the shelter said: 'The management was not listening. All staff complained they were extremely understaffed and often had to work alone. We [said] it was only a matter of time before something serious happened.'

Asylum centre inspectors recently wrote that supervisors had been warned 'several times' about cutbacks leading to staff being left alone, and Mrs Mezher yesterday vowed to sue those responsible. Patrick Sjogren, boss of HBV, the company that runs the centre, is a former wine company chairman also involved in internet poker.

Last night Swedish police named their suspect – who is due in court today – but added in a statement: 'The identity is not proven.' Meanwhile, national police chief Dan Eliasson sparked controversy by expressing sympathy for the alleged attacker, saying: 'Who knows what horrors he has been through?'

He said he was 'distressed' by the tragedy, but added: 'Under what circumstances has he grown up? What is the trauma he carries? This entire immigration crisis shows how unfair life is in many parts of the world.'
