

Five Fewer For The Canadian Security Services To Worry About

Five less people to worry about. Had they remained in Canada, or had they returned to Canada, they would have had to have been placed under round-the-clock surveillance. Such surveillance requires at least ten men for each person being watched. The expense is gigantic.

There is no reason to think that once someone is ready to go off to the Islamic State that that person, if prevented from doing so, will have a change of heart, and no longer be seething with the fervor that prompted him to want to join what is the most most violent, enthusiastically cruel, even mad-dog group of Muslims and, having not been able to do so only because they were prevented by a Western security service from leaving, will, in the Western country – Canada in this case – that they are forced to remain in, become less full of murderous hatred for the “enemies of Islam” – that is, you, and me, and all non-Muslims who still refuse, ungrateful Kuffar that we are, to accept the One True Faith.