

Hate on the streets of my home city

I think I'm finished with London. They say, you can take the girl out of London but you can't take London out of the girl. The London that won't leave me is the friendly neighbourhoods of my childhood run by the older generation who fought the blitz (which was still much in evidence – the bombsites were our playground) and afterwards built our prosperity of the 50s and swinging sixties.

I believe the men with this particular banner, which I think is the nastiest I have seen during this current disruption are being sought by the police. Which leaves me wondering for a 6th weekend, why not lift them ON THE SPOT!!!!

There are several photographs of them doing the rounds – this is the clearest from X/Twitter; I don't know who took the original but it's in the public domain now, and for good reason.

Notice that the people being pushed into the sea are women, and women in western dress at that – cf the free Israeli women raped, sexually mutilated and murdered on October 7th.

To quote one commentator on X

Make these Londoners infamous. They are carrying a placard that calls for the genocide of the world's Jews, alluding to the Nazi's "Final Solution to the Jewish question," our extermination.
