

Hate-spewing ISIS supporter, who posted homophobic rants online has been working as a teaching assistant in British secondary schools

An Islamic State supporter who believes victims of terror attacks will burn in hell has been working as a teaching assistant, a The march was held on June 11 in the wake of the Manchester bomb attack and Rachel says she went as a “heartbroken” mother and not an EDL supporter.

“I’m nothing to do with the EDL, I just wanted to support the Lancashire families who lost children in the bombing. “I’m not racist – my husband and his family are mixed race. I’m being treated worse than a paedophile because I’ve been told I can’t go anywhere near the school.”

Rachel had been suspended with full pay pending an investigation. It describes taking part in the rally, which was captured on social media, as “potentially gross misconduct”.

Mr Robinson said: “I can’t believe it to be honest. It’s outrageous and unacceptable how the school have treated her. Rachel is just your average mum and it’s not right. The march was against hate and terrorism and included people from all different faiths and backgrounds. It was nothing to do with the EDL."