

Iran Overplays Its Hand

by Hugh Fitzgerald

It is still unclear what the Biden Administration will do about the 2015 nuclear deal with Iran. Biden has at times expressed a willingness to rejoin the JCPOA, without any change to the agreement, and at other times, he has suggested that he would join the deal only if it were modified to include limits on Iran's development of ballistic missiles and its regional aggression, through a network of proxies and allies – from the Houthis in Yemen, to Kata'ib Hezbollah in Iraq, to the Alawite-led army in Syria, to Hezbollah in Lebanon – to create a "Shi'a crescent" from the Gulf to the Mediterranean. Now Iran, has apparently given Washington a deadline to rejoin the 2015 nuclear deal. In so doing, it appears to have overplayed its hand.

The latest report, on the time table that Iran now demands be met by Washington, is here: "Will Iran overplaying its hand force Biden to call its bluff – analysis,” by Yonah Jeremy Bob, Jihad Watch.
