

'ISIS will fill the streets of Paris with dead bodies':

From the Vocativ.

Salhi – who is understood to have been known to security services since at least 2006 – reportedly told arresting officers he is a member of ISIS. He is thought to not have had a criminal record and an investigation into his 'possible radicalisation' was dropped in 2008. But sources close to the investigation said Salhi was radicalised more than a decade ago after contact with Muslim convert Frederic Jean Salvi – known as 'Ali' – who is suspected of preparing attacks in Indonesia with Al-Qaeda militants.
