

Julie Burchill in trouble again.

Last year she was dropped by her publisher and her forthcoming book was cancelled after she had a spat with irritating communist and Muslim journalist Ashna (Ash) Sarkar. I posted about to Oprah Winfrey, the television presenter who conducted an interview with the couple in March.

Miss Toch then suggested “Doprah?

Miss Toch has now been suspended from her own business. Whoever she appointed to run it day to day says he/she/they/it considered its founder’s comments “as offensive, unacceptable and highly contradictory to the inclusive manner in which FLC has always and will continue to work with members of all the communities in managing the challenges of matrimonial and family disputes”.

The Family Law Bar Association also condemned Toch. It said that it had written to the barrister and had referred the exchanges to the Bar Standards Board and the Bar Council.

Thankfully Spiked on line has come forward with “The Telegraph will sack a columnist after aiming racist tweets at a member of the royal family, but ignore a barrage of defamatory, and – by her own admission – racist and misogynist posts...”

The tweet that upset her merely pointed out that Mohammed’s marriage and sexual activity with Aisha at such a young age was ‘iffy’. But one must not point out unpalatable truths about their prophet.

Meanwhile the Daily Mail today the English Cricket Board are looking at the teenage banter of other, now experienced, players. It is almost as if somebody is trying to undermine the selection of a swathe of (white ethnic English) cricketers.

This isn't reminding me of Geore Orwell anymore; It's reminding me of Alexander Solzhenitsyn and his descriptions of the Soviet Union of the 1950s.
