

Lies and Jew hatred in east London; What The Schoolgirl Represents And Why Her Lies Must Be Met With Truth

There is a well regarded philanthropist in east London and Essex named Jack Petchey. He's 90, was born into a huge poor family in the east End, made some money (quite a lot really) and decided to do some good for the young of east London and Essex with it. I know first hand what good his foundation has done.

One of the things the foundation sponsors is a competition for publicspeaking called the tweets, before she deleted them, didn't make happy reading either (including retweets from Hamas apologist Abbas Sarsor) such that again, the head master should be a worried man.

Wanstead High School (when I knew it as Wanstead County High School) had a good opinion of itself; the pupils rather looked down on those of us schooled the other side of the borough boundary in Waltham Forest. In our turn we regarded their co-educational style as rather racy. But it was a good school; it remains an affluent area.

There is no response from the head at the moment, but I know that he has been asked to show Brian's response to the students. It is half term this week so I doubt whether anything will happen at school until this time next week. Elsewhere meanwhile, the usual anti-israel, anti-Jew suspects are busy...
