

London: Brexit Betrayal Rally

To Westminster. Friday 29th March 2019. It should have been Brexit Day. Even last week we still hoped that in the absence of a deal, we would leave on the designated day under WTO terms. But no. So what was conceived as a party, turned into a rally of anger and constructive resolve. I got there late as I had an unbreakable earlier commitment. So I didn't see the final leg of the March to Leave which started in Sunderland walk into Parliament Square at 3pm. Whitehall and Parliament Square were full of a well behaved crowd. UKIP had a platform in Parliament Street towards Whitehall and the other groups, Leave EU, The Brexit Party and other groups had a platform opposite St Margaret's church. So we had a choice if we wanted to circulate.

These are a selection of photographs.

The English yellow vest movement isn't as widespread as in France; they are concentrating on justice for the three boys killed by a hit and run driver and his passenger.

Gerard Batten, leader of UKIP was making his first speech as I arrived.

I will never forget the day in June 2016 when the here) spoke.

He spoke of the decline of the British Fishing industry, the British steel industry, the numerous redundancies as British factories have been closed and moved elsewhere in Europe with EU subsidies.

EU interference in everyday life, including proposed speed limiters on our cars, which will also track our every movement, and moves to limit the internet and copyright.

He also spoke about the EU army. Why does the EU need an army? Do they have ideas of Imperialist expansion? Into Ukraine perhaps, and a war with Russia? Or use in civil disturbance, on the streets of Barcelona, the boulevards of Paris. Maybe eventually here, the streets of London.

While those ordinary citizens who voted Remain may be members of our family and friends we can never forgive the likes of Blair, Starmer, Soubry.

Sweets...chocolate... now, all free. Like the childcatcher from Chitty Chitty Bang Bang, but without any of the charm. They have told the citizens of the EU that they cannot leave the Eu by democratic means. We can and must stop them.

I had missed Tommy's first speech but he came and spoke again.

He expressed his affection for the crowd. Our people, the working class who have been overlooked and forgotten. He asked to be allowed to join UK and the reaction from the crowd present was favourable.

Gerard Batten spoke again. He said that he had given a television interview while other speakers were on stage. The interviewer first mentioned the 'far-right Tommy Robinson'. Batten said that his first remarks were that Tommy is not far-right. If he were he would have nothing to do with him. He joked that Tommy is no saint, and would he please keep out of trouble in future, but he has a lot to bring.

The rally ended with land of Hope and Glory. It was a good turn out, all sorts of people from all ages and walks of life, other than very few children, this being a school day.

Hopefully Theresa May could hear (and see) the crowd, safely behind her security at 10 Downing Street, even if she does spend the rest of the weekend at the PM's country retreat Chequers.

As I made my way to the station others were taking the message into Westminster, around and about.
