

Malta's schools targeted by emailed bomb threat

From the Times of Malta

5am email calling for Islamic caliphate sparks police probe, evacuations.

Bomb threats emailed to schools across the country were likely sent from a foreign IP address en masse to email addresses gleaned from government websites, sources close to the police say.

Schools across the country were struck by bomb threats on Monday morning, in a seemingly coordinated attack.

Sources within government told Times of Malta that every state school in Malta and Gozo received a bomb threat by email on Monday morning, with several private and Church schools also likely to have been targeted. Meanwhile, sources close to the police say that over 90 government schools received the email.

All schools received an identical email and government sources described the incident as a "coordinated attack".

Authorities initially considered closing all schools for the day, but decided against it on the advice of bomb disposal experts.

Email threat repeats Islamist tropes

The email which sparked the bomb threat fears repeats several Islamist tropes about enemies of Islam and calls for an Islamic Caliphate to be established.
