

Muslims are not like us, race equality chief says

From the Trevor Phillips, the former chairman of the Equality and Human Rights Commission, said it was disrespectful to assume that Muslim communities would change.

Mr Phillips, the former chairman of the Equality and Human Rights Commission, added: "Part of the integration process is for the rest of us to grasp that people aren't going to change their views simply because we are constantly telling them that basically they should be like us."

The Muslim Council of Britain said yesterday that demanding change from Muslims encouraged people to discriminate against them.