

Nota Bene, Part II

by Theodore Dalrymple (October 2016)

Incompetence has probably always been a more important factor in human affairs than malice. We have all made many mistakes, but not many of us have done so through malice, unless self-destructiveness be construed as malice towards the self. more>>>