

Obama's Ambassador Sabotaging Trump In Guatemala

Heads Must Roll or Illegal Immigration Will Keep Flowing

by Steve Hecht

Ambassador Todd Robinson avoided the call for resignations, since he is a career diplomat, and now he is rushing to perpetuate the Obama agenda through Donald Trump's tenure.

When Donald Trump requested the resignations of US ambassadors, the embassy in Guatemala released an ominous message. Press received head of Barack Obama's resistance office is US Ambassador Todd Robinson. He is frantically attempting to consolidate power for local allies, so they can resist Trump's agenda in the region.

Robinson's strategy is to change the Guatemalan Constitution to guarantee his allies' imposed them on the Guatemalan government, it is riddled with radical collectivists who violate the law to further their agenda, with Robinson's protection.

President Jimmy Morales can remove executive-branch functionaries but not magistrates. against development projects. If the constitutional changes pass, the judiciary will be a more formidable obstacle, even if Trump liberates Guatemala from Robinson's grip.

A second part of the resistance strategy is to force Morales to resign, with threats of prosecution, to avoid a Anti-Impunity Commission. In reality the commission is Obama's enforcement arm over Guatemala's government.

Robinson and UN Commissioner Iván Velázquez have an apparent arrangement with the National Unity for Hope (UNE), a party Velázquez identified as corrupt in 2015. The UNE didn't face dissolution and prosecution, as two other parties and their members did, in exchange for cooperation in the Congress. The UNE recently procured an public letter affirmed the sabotage of the Trump administration from Obama's holdovers. Likewise, five US senators led by Mike Lee (R-UT) have Middle East. Illegals proceed through Mexico, which is powerless to stop them, to the United States. The Trump administration, therefore, has an opportunity in Guatemala to significantly reduce the flow without spending more money than Congress has allotted.

The Obama policy fomented this problem by supporting armed gangs descended from guerrilla backed by Fidel Castro in Guatemala's internal conflict, which nominally concluded in 1996. The UN High Commission for Refugees has documented that since 2008 there has been a Alliance for Prosperity, they would use their elite security forces to bring law and order to the rural areas, especially the borders. The inhabitants would welcome the change and cooperate with security forces to identify foreigners passing through illegally, reducing their flow to the United States.

The Guatemalan government hasn't done this so far because of the protection the armed gangs enjoyed through their overbearing US allies: Obama, Biden, Clinton, Kerry, and Robinson. The Trump administration will surely change this, but the purposeful strategy of total resistance has delayed their ability to attend to it.

The Guatemala sabotage is but one part of the resistance to Trump. The same people for the same reasons are its creators. They know that a grateful population, free to express themselves, will be witnesses to their perfidy, hypocrisy, and cruel rule towards the people they claim to represent – as will occur when Trump's policies create better education, security, and opportunities for inner-city inhabitants.

Fergus Hodgson contributed to this article, which first appeared in the