

Outrage as Muslim students 'bully Jewish classmate out of Berlin school'

From the German edition of told Tagesspiegel that "if the report is true, it is deeply shocking. This is anti-Semitism of the ugliest form." Schuster called on Berlin's education authorities to carry out an investigation of the case, after the teenager's parents complained that the school had been slow to react to their repeated calls for intervention. Muslim communities "must also actively fight anti-Semitism among their ranks. It can't be accepted that hatred of Jews and Israel can be promoted in German mosques," said Schuster.

"Teenagers from Arab countries who have been raised to believe that Israel should be destroyed need to learn that we don't tolerate anti-Semitism in Germany," said Kerstin Griese, the federal commissioner for religious communities.

"These cases are becoming ever more common, and not only in Berlin," Levi Salomon, a spokesperson for the Jewish Democracy Forum told Tagesspiegel.
