

Over at Times of Israel, However, Rebecca Bermeister Is Anything But a Dozy Bint: No 'Solidarity Hijab' for Her

An article published on January 25 this year that addresses itself to the many foolish Infidel females who donned hijab when participating in the anti-Trump marches of recent date, but could equally well be addressed to all the other foolish Infidel females who did it on "World Hijab Day", this week.

<http://blogs.timesofisrael.com/like-lambs-to-the-slaughter/>

"Like Lambs to the Slaughter".

'I should have been there. Showing solidarity with thousands of women all over the world, taking to the streets to protest injustices perpetrated against women since time immemorial; this is my thing.

'But somehow the issues all got mangled into a quagmire of feminist anger, political divisiveness, and the subversive subtext of pro-Islamic alignment.

This lady has excellent BS detectors. I applaud her. – CM

'Fresh out of high school, my lesbian lawyer friend dragged me to a Women's Day march in Sydney's Hyde Park.

'Relatively new to the world of feminism, I found my place amongst a group of highly-intelligent, open-minded and open-hearted women and listened to the issues at hand.

'Joining the call for an end to domestic violence, stricter rape laws, better housing and support services for women at risk, equal pay, equal opportunity, legal protection from sexual harassment, and reasonable childcare seemed legitimate causes to support.

'Since then I have been a staunch feminist. I believe in these things wholeheartedly.

'I also believe women should be allowed to drive. But that's just me.

SARC OFF. – CM

'During my years as a religious mother of young children, a rabbi once pointed out that if you allow your children to watch a TV show, even a comedy – especially a comedy – you are putting them in a position where subconsciously they have no choice but to agree with the message of the show itself.

'When we watch 'Family Guy' or 'Seinfeld', psychologically and subconsciously, by virtue of the fact that we are enjoying the humour, we are inherently agreeing to the cynicism. I can't help but feel that something similar is going on here.

'Here' being things like the mass marches recently instigated by the likes of Linda Sarsour, or .. and even more blatantly so, a week or so after Ms Bermeister's piece was published – World Hijab Day. – CM

'I'm not suggesting that everyone who joined the marches supports Linda Sarsour (the powerful New York City activist who organised the march on DC), in her stand against the anti-sharia bill, but rather, that there is an unconscious alignment with the cause.

'The psychology is subtle, though the agenda is not.

'On Muslim media and in mosques across the world, it is publicly acknowledged in broad daylight; the non-believer is a Kafir – he may be deceived