

Police: We can't stop people flying Hezbollah flags on London march

From the march in 2009 is how I met the gentlemen of March for England. Some years MfE, EDL, the Casuals, Iranian secular exiles and others formed a big enough group to mount a counter demonstration. Other years, when the march was held on a working day individuals did their best to persuade the police to have the flags removed but this was always refused. The circular argument always went, 'We have orders to permit it – you must write to your MP or the Home Office' and the Home office replied to the individual of their MP, 'Policing is a matter for the most senior officer on the spot; The Home Secretary does not interfere in day to day policing.' Catch 22 yes? Sadiq Khan has never been interested. And I can't see new Home Secretary Sajid Javid rocking the multi-cultural boat.

For the last for the first time in 2016 was most uplifting.

Al Quds this year is Sunday 10th June and now that the US embassy has moved from Mayfair to south London The march will terminate in a rally by the Saudi Embassy. I know groups who are intending to join the challenge. Hopefully numbers will be good.
