

Say Good-bye to the 'Islamophobia' Hoax. October 7 Comes to the USA

By Roger L Simon

In the wake of the tragedy in New Orleans and the bizarre Cybertruck explosion, not to mention many similar events in Europe almost daily, including various knifings and the German Christmas Markets attacks, and, needless to say, ongoing Iran-instigated carnage all over the Middle East with its latest manifestation being the insane behavior of the Houthis—as if Hamas and Hezbollah were not enough—it's long been about time the USA and the world finally confront, be honest about, our Islam problem.

For a long time much of this confrontation has been allayed, sometimes completely dismissed, by accusations of something called "Islamophobia," which is an odd misnomer since the fear of Islam is anything but irrational (the definition of a phobia).

The threat is very real and obviously unending. It's not hard to tie together the Tesla Cybertruck that happened to blow up in front of the Trump Hotel in Las Vegas and had been rented on the same relatively-obscure app (Turo) with the, somehow also electric, pickup that killed 15, as of now, in New Orleans.

This religious-inspired evil mayhem has been going on for a long time, centuries really, but the sanitizing accusation of "Islamophobia" as a concept is apparently a French academic's invention from 1910. It was brought into English usage by Columbia University professor cum Palestinian activist Edward Said in 1985 and took off to the extent that it has been raised every time the moment a Muslim terror act occurs in the decades since 9/11.

Its pervasive adoption by liberal elites is moral narcissism and virtue signaling at their purest and have prevented

Western society from seeing its own destruction when its standing in front of them. Europe, as we knew it, is on the edge of extinction.

To be blunt and obvious, the actual source of this problem has nothing to do with a phobia of any sort and stems from a literal reading of key parts of the original texts of a warlike Seventh Century tribalist ideology. Its calls for “jihad” are often excused as “spiritual,” but in reality are anything but. That ideology has not been significantly reformed but is continually being refreshed and enhanced—everywhere on the globe, including right here in the USA.

We see that in a video of what children are being taught at a Islamic school in Philadelphia. They chant in unison: “We will Sacrifice Ourselves for Al-Aqsa; Will Chop off their Heads, Subject Them to Eternal Torture.” There’s more from these tykes if you care to click on it. (Warning: very creepy) Like the New Orleans terrorist, they’re all good “US citizens.”

Needless to say, these children are not taught there were two Jewish Temples standing where their beloved Al-Aqsa now sits, the first one, built by King Solomon roughly sixteen hundred years before the existence of Islam.

There’s nothing new about this evil indoctrination of the young. From a report in the Jerusalem Post.

“Over 200 US-government- approved textbooks used in hundreds of Palestinian UNRWA-sponsored schools are reportedly teaching Arab children between the first and ninth grades to kill Israelis and sacrifice themselves as martyrs to drive Jews out of the country.

“The violent narrative can be found in 240 books – ranging from civics to mathematics – in over 400 UNRWA schools in the West Bank, Gaza and east Jerusalem, said experts at a Tuesday conference for the Center for Near East Policy Research in downtown Jerusalem.”

That’s from 2016. The chances are it’s only gotten worse.

Meanwhile, October 7 has come to the USA and nobody’s home.

Some talking heads on television are surprised, or pretend to be, Shamsud-Din Jabbar, the ISIS-inspired New Orleans terrorist, had a substantial career in the U. S. military as if none of us remember Major Nidal Hasan who murdered 13 people at Fort Hood in 2009. At that time, the Army refused to call it terrorism, saying, suffused with some version of Islamophobia-think of their own, that the major was simply insane, although he was corresponding with one of the most important terror leaders abroad. Since then, the military has become increasingly “woke,” a truly frightening development considering the world situation.

Something must be done. Most realize, after having watched their press conference, that New Orleans authorities were remarkably unprepared for what happened. The woman from the FBI was, to be kind, not inspiring, ditto the New Orleans police chief. Unfortunately, the country has to learn how to deal with these attacks on a much more diligent level but whom do we rely on in the short run?

Many believe with good reason the current FBI spends more time tracking parents at school board meetings than it does on counter-terrorism.

How much do we need a rebuilt FBI now!

As I type this, Palestinian demonstrators march in New York, demanding a “global Intifada,” only hours after the hideous bloodshed. They undoubtedly will cry “Islamophobia” to any complaints about their untimely behavior. We can’t let them. We must obliterate that word and, more importantly, the concept forever. It won’t be easy because nations like Qatar have bought our universities and many businesses and will seek to prevent honest discussion of the problems of Islam. But we can do it.

And as we all know, there is hope. It's only 19 days until President Trump finally takes office and the most incompetent administration of all time finally disappears.

Let us hope, under the circumstances, his cabinet appointments go quickly and people like Pam Biondi, Kash Patel, Tulsi Gabbard and Pete Hegseth will assume their posts rapidly. We will need them.

Let us hope too that at least a few Democrat senators realize the urgency of the situation and move things along in a patriotic, rather than an abysmally partisan and dangerous to the American people, manner.
