

Security guard tells of scene as Reading triple-murder suspect Khairi Saadallah was arrested – as suspect's brother says he was 'defending himself'

Now this is really weird. Either the guard recognised him, which is why he noticed but is being discreet. That, I think is the most likely explanation; Reading isn't a huge town and a security guard is trained in observation and would indeed have had cause to remember that face. Either that or it's a conspiracy theorists dream. Probably one master-minded by lizards.

From the Earlier I found details of Saadallah's most recent court appearances and convictions for crimes of violence. I only put the links but I need not have worried as the details were all over the internet within a couple of hours. Saadallah seems to have a problem with authority figures. Last year he was in court several times charged with assaulting an emergency worker, a security guard in Sainsburys who caught him shoplifting and finally a judge who was trying to sentence him. These were described as ;non-serious offences. I suppose compared with terrorism they are. But there was a time that assaulting a judge would have been taken a bit more seriously. I can't actually remember a Judge ever being assaulted but 40 years ago assault on a court clerk was pretty serious. That wasn't me. That was my colleague who was standing in the place where I had quite recently been, he having seen the kick coming and nudged me out of the way. But I digress. This is the report from the Monday morning