

Seth Frantzman: Immigration And What Can't But Should Be Said

Here..

There is no end to this immigration. It is changing, and has damaged, and now perhaps destroying, Europe. Must Europeans continue to be afraid to speak about what they see and feel? Must they pretend that it doesn't matter or, still worse, that "things will somehow work out" because surely those who are in positions of authority know what they are doing. But clearly they do not. They are frightened, they are unimaginative, they are criminally negligent. So why should those who are not among them still be so quiet? Why so many inhibitions? What are they afraid of? What do they have to lose?