

Snapshots of Hate on British streets

Yesterday's various demonstrations, ostensibly in support of Gaza and 'Palestine' but in reality a chance to give vent to anti-semitic hate against Jews and Israel were too big and too awful to post any kind of comprehensive review. A couple of images and video clips have stayed with me.

This one was in Glasgow. Glasgow has had its share of sectarian violence over the years, Catholic v Protestant echoing the Troubles in Ireland. And that's leaving out a nasty period of criminal gang warfare. The rivalry between the two big football teams is well beyond that in Liverpool or Manchester. Glasgow Rangers the Protestant team that for many years refused to sign a player of a different religion, and Glasgow Celtic the Catholic team who would sign a non Catholic if one were brave enough, but whose Irish roots demonstrated fervent support for the IRA, and in recent years Palestine.

"Don't forget where the Jews were in 1940!"

This clip is doing the rounds but Andy Ngo is a reliable source. A wee Scots lassie taunting a man "Don't forget where the Jews were in 1940". We must not forget that the Glasgow city council frequently flies the Palestinian flag and First Minister of Scotland Humza Yousaf, while of Pakistani heritage himself, is married as his second wife to Nadia El-Nakla, of Palestinian heritage whose parents and brothers are currently in Gaza (this open air prison is so oppressed that people can fly in and out visiting family at will) and broadcasting every night bewailing their fate on Scottish TV. The Highlands is a different country in many ways.

And these from London. The Al Quds march has formed up in Portland Place by the BBC for some years now. Even at it's biggest (and i thought it was big and nasty then) the several thousand marcher used to spread out trying to look like a lot more people than they were. Yesterday the space couldn't contain them all. Travel across central London was badly affected by the mass, so I am told. This must be taken either by a drone or an upper window at the BBC. The Palestinian Ambassador (ex PLO) had it early on.

And finally this picture of two charming young women.

There are other memes doing the rounds celebrating the terrorists who flew into the music festival and the villages on hang-gliders.

As it happened the Metropolitan Police would very much like to locate the “ladies” to speak to them.

The police have managed to find front views of the woman in red. She had a covid mask on in them, but her piercings are distinctive; do you know who

Finally some words from Home Secretary Suella Braverman which I pray she means, and will see are carried out. Sadly the Home Office is infiltrated and the Police are 'woke'

To all those who saw fit to promote genocide, glorify terrorism and mock the murder of Jewish people, including women and babies – the police are coming for you.
