

Ten years on

I was unable to attend at Tavistock Square with my friends from March for England this year due to family commitments. But a friend has allowed me to use his photograph of the flowers they left there. All was done in proper order as in previous years.

A minutes silence was called for 11.30am this morning and was honoured with impressive decorum in the place I happened to be. We will not forget. We will not forget the 38 holiday makers (30 of them British) murdered in Tunisia last month. Or Fusilier Lee Rigby.
