

That was the moment I realized I couldn't work for [StemExpress] any more.

Transcript from Planned Parenthood Mar Monte, a mega-clinic in San Jose, California that has an annual budget of $100 million or 10 percent of the national organization.

O'Donnell, who turned whistleblower after leaving StemExpress, said the child was the most fully developed she had seen up to that point. She describes in great detail how the newly aborted boy was rinsed off and prepared for dissection.

Her colleague called her over and, according to O'Donnell, said, "Hey Holly, come over here, I want you to see something kind of cool, kind of neat." O'Donnell said she was flabbergasted to see "...the most gestated fetus and closest thing to a baby I've seen."

Her colleague then took an instrument and "tapped the heart and it starts beating."

O'Donnell says, "I am sitting here looking at this fetus and it's heart is beating and I don't know what to think." She said she didn't know if the child was alive or dead but "it had a face. It wasn't completely torn up. Its nose was very pronounced. It had eyelids and its mouth was pronounced."

The medical technician said the child was so intact that they could "procure a lot from it. We're going to procure a brain." The tech told O'Donnell they would need to "go through the face." The medical tech took scissors and cut through the child's lower jaw up through the mouth. O'Donnell was directed to cut the rest of the way through "the middle of the face."

"I can't even describe what that feels like," said O'Donnell.

O'Donnell had to take the boy's remains and put him in a bio-hazard container and "then I realized I was the only person ever to hold that baby."

"That was the moment I realized I couldn't work for [StemExpress] any more," she said.
