

The Incoherence of the Obama-Clinton Foreign Policy

by Conrad Black (June 2016)

It is a little disappointing that no one seems to have taken up Donald Trump's challenge, in his foreign-policy address three weeks ago, to explain the Obama-Hillary Clinton foreign policy. The absurd and tragic alignment of the United States and its unenthusiastic allies fighting alongside Russia and Iran against ISIS in the fragments of Iraq, and only partially doing so in the bloodstained remnants of Syria (as we are also fighting Russia and Iran there, in respect of the beleaguered regime of Bashar Assad), has been extensively reported. It has not been remotely adequately condemned as the evidence of incoherent and incompetent statesmanship that it is. more>>>
