

The Undeniable Link Between Immigration and Terror

Dan Cadman writes at the I refuted the argument put forward by some observers that women, children, and the aged (“widows and orphans” in the thoroughly disingenuous language of Obamaspeak) would be safe populations to admit as refugees.

On December 2, Tashfeen Malik, jihadi bride of Syed Rizwan Farook, proved conclusively false the notion that these subpopulations represent no threat. Malik did this by participating in a massacre with her husband in San Bernardino, Calif., that left are fallible. This, too, should be no surprise. It would be easy, but simplistic, to blame the individual officials involved in the vetting. When there is no adverse information to retrieve from the various government systems checked, everyone (including those officials) presumes all is well. But those systems are not the impenetrable walls that the administration has striven so hard to make us believe.

No, the fault lies instead with the White House and its cabinet officers, who have deliberately misled us into believing that “no information equals safe to admit”. Clearly it does not, for all of the many reasons I have here and here and
