The Visa Loophole

We don't know what these people do once they get here or whether they ever go home. Adam Kredo writes in the exploit security gaps in the visa waiver program, the Obama administration continues to green light immigrants in record numbers, Forbes said.

> "I don't think they're [the administration] being held accountable and I think part of the reason they're not held accountable is because this is one of those issues that they love to blend apples and oranges and confuse the public with," Forbes said.

> "What we do know is that there sometimes can be tremendous pressure to stamp these visas and get them moving," the lawmaker added. "This is an administration that has taken the motto of finding yes instead of being correct."

> As congressional concerns over the issue grow, the Obama administration is moving forward with a plan to resettle some 10,000 Syrian refugees in the United States this year. In a bid to expedite the process, screening times for these individuals have been cut from around 18 to 24 months to about three months.

> Obama administration officials have admitted that the current system is flawed and "presents risks to our national security."