

They haven't learned a thing

By William Corden

It's becoming more obvious each day that the left wing media has learned nothing from the drubbing that their party got this past November.

The New York Times is probably even more rabid than it was before, as is PBS with their two protagonists Capehart and Brooks still refusing to accept that maybe the new guys have got better solutions. MSNBC and CNN are still pouring out the same hatred and drivel and nobody seems to think the people were right in voting for a sea change in policy

They still think that they are right and the voters were wrong.

Look at what President Trump has done in the last few weeks. He has turned the public service inside out, finally the truth has come out that "work from home" is a big boondoggle (and I know firsthand, because I worked from home way back in the early 2000's, I'm ashamed to say that it was for me ... a boondoggle)

His new press secretary actually answers questions without looking scared for her life, and she's way smarter than all of the reporters. She's brought some startling level of decorum and politeness to the baying hounds at press briefings.

He's purged many of the incompetents running major agencies (with more to come) and is the only one in recent history to have the nerve to point out the pathetic deficiencies of the

DEI programs.

His previous experience in the White House shines through because this time he's determined to be the boss .. the message is loud and clear "don't mess with me" This time he comes across as thoughtful and intelligent, he's always polite and says "please" when asking for questions... a unique trait for an American.

He's already got the border problems under control (although it's still a major issue)

On the international front he's got everybody shaking in their shoes because they're being called to account and he won't listen to the intellectual bullshit that's won the day in the past.

We see light at the end of the tunnel for Israel, his proposal makes absolute sense to everybody except those with a vested interest in keeping the fires burning.

For the first time since that pointless war in Ukraine started we have a man at the helm who might be able to bring the slaughter to an end.

Who'd a thunk it? Talking to Putin directly might lead us forward?

Unfortunately , even though we call them "legacy" media they still have a lot of clout on the world stage and they hate to lose that clout.
