

Tottenham stand firm on Israeli flag ban while players wave Palestinian colours unchecked

steward had been acting within their rules by forcing a supporter to remove his flag during the match against Aston Villa on Wednesday. Club guidelines state that “national flags during times of political conflicts, campaigns or issues” are deemed inappropriate.

Supporters at the club, which has traditional ties with north London’s Jewish community, were angered by footage of a fan being forced to take down his Israeli flag while in the stands against Aston Villa on Wednesday. The video was widely shared on social media.

In contrast, Pogba and Manchester United team-mate Amad Diallo are facing no action from the Football Association for holding up a Palestinian flag after United’s draw with Fulham 24 hours earlier.

The same thing happened at the Cup Final on Saturday. I enjoyed Leicester’s win but not the spectacle of Hamza Choudary prancing around the pitch during the celebrations brandishing a Palestinian flag, which his colleague Wesley Fofana helped display. It did however gladden the heart of The Palestinian ambassador to the UK who wrote a letter of thanks. He said, as reported by
