

UK's worst jihadis and extremists move into 'prison within a prison' at HMP Frankland

From the HMP Frankland was earmarked by the Government to house extremists to stop them spreading their poison to other prisoners.

The move has now happened and radicals are being housed in a separate centre within the high-security prison, which is already home to some of the most notorious criminals in the UK. . . But the jihadis are deemed so dangerous that prison bosses have been forced to lock them away from everyone else.

Lee Rigby's killer, Michael Adebolajo, is already at Frankland and last month it emerged he was "brainwashing" fellow inmates in prison. Adebolajo, who killed Fusilier Rigby outside the Royal Artillery Barracks in Woolwich, South East London, in May 2013, was described as spending "most of his waking hours preaching his distorted form of Islam to anyone who will listen".

Adebolajo and hate preacher Anjem Choudary could be among those locked away inside the separation centre. The move will also see two other separation centres created within high-security jails, with the three centres combined holding up to 28 of the most radicalised offenders.

The new centre at HMP Frankland was one of the main recommendations of a review which found evidence of
