

Universities UK headquarters hosted Islamic extremist group, despite national student union ban

A radical Islamist group which the Government has threatened to ban was invited to give a talk at the headquarters of Universities UK, University of Westminster in 2012.

Earlier this year he also spoke at another Universities UK venue, the Woburn House Conference Centre on the subject "Is the Caliphate a viable alternative for the Middle East?"

All speaker events at universities are supposed to follow government Prevent Policy guidance and Hannah Stuart, co-head of the security and extremism unit at Policy Exchange, said it is "astonishing" that Universities UK hosted an event featuring Hizb ut-Tahrir on its own premises.?

However UUK say that Woburn house was hired by an outside organisation, for what they described as a 'Great Debate'. had they known that a member of Hizb ut-Tahrir was to speak they would not have permitted it; they were misled by the organisers and they wil not be doing business with them (whoever they are) again.
