

We must continue to drain the swamps of antisemitic lies

The Big Lies, old and new, get crazier and crazier and those who support them feel it will protect them from the coming Mobs. It won't.

by Phyllis Chesler

We are not on our way to Babylon or to Europe again but oh, how I am increasingly weighed down by the Jew hatred which confronts us every day and in every place: On campus, in the media, at the United Nations, in Congress, online, in rap music, and on the streets.

Aren't you tired of this, too?

It never stops coming and the Big Lies, both old and new, get crazier and crazier and those who support them feel that such virtue-signaling will protect them from the coming Mobs.

The Ayatollahs are allowed to threaten yet another Jewish genocide (Chas v'chalilah!) on Twitter, but no kind word about Israel or the Jews, especially if it's true, is easily allowed. No critique of such word, or of Islam, especially if true, is allowed.

Antisemites can hold forth; their critics are not allowed to repeat their words as the cleverest in the world and were "much maligned because of it." He was accused of "racism"; he now says that "all doors of all universities are now locked to me."

I wrote an article about Israel's new Whose Holy Land? Archeology Meets Geopolitics in Today's Middle East